The 1963 summer vacation has just ended and the two sisters Anne and Frederique Weber are beginning their school year at a Parisian high school for girls. Their parents are divorced and they hardly see their father except during vacation.

Anne is thirteen years old, rather reserved but also very distracted in her studies, dreaming of a boy she met during vacation. She is a dishonest girl who steals and lies continuously without a care in the world. Frederique is fifteen years old and she's not a great student either. She plays the rebellious teenager:

she has a fling with a boy, who writes her dirty letters, she smokes, and is active in a left-wing group, even though politics is forbidden at school.
