A small town in Louisiana in the early 2000s. Sid Widow, around thirty years of age, was born and raised in the small town of Trenchfoot. He's watched on as unemployment and insecurity slowly ate away at the inhabitants as well as himself. To make money, he relies on a dog that he found on the side of the road named Hobo. The mutt might not look like much, but he wins every dog fight that Sid signs him up for, giving Sid a glimmer of hope. That is, until the organizer of the fights, a redneck named Lazy, figures out what's been going on: before each fight, Sid laces his champion's fur with cocaine, temporarily paralyzing the jaws of the dogs trying to bite his throat. As punishment, Sid gets taught a lesson in pain. His sole comfort is a wallet that had fallen to the ground while his attackers were stringing him up from a leash. In it, he finds enough cash to buy some beers and a lottery ticket. A winning ticket. And just like that, Sid's rich. He has more money than he knows what to do with. But once he buys his barbecue and giant TV, he becomes directionless... And the envious townspeople will drag him into a circle of violence.
