Paris, 1802. Bonaparte has just been proclaimed First Consul, provoking Fouché's departure from the Police headquarters. The two men are now both set on finding a certain object, stolen by a beautiful prostitute, which could change their destiny. Bonaparte calls on the services of François, a petty thief otherwise known as "The Stingray," to recover the mysterious object. Just two years into the 19th century, Napoleon is already making a name for himself and dark plots have begun to emerge from France's lowest and highest echelons.
