Ismaël, a former member of a street gang in Los Angeles, one day decides to clean up his act and enlist in the army. In order to pay for the medical treatment his sister needs, he volunteers to take part in a research and development project. That's how he ends up spending several months inside "the Boiler," a classified military location, where he undergoes a series of experiments of which he retains only the vaguest memories. Two years later, Ismaël is living peacefully in L.A... until the day his sister and nephew are shot down by a gang. Plunging into fury, Ismaël begins to scour the streets of Los Angeles—which now look to him just like the streets of Baghdad...
