What will happen when the Antarctic ice sheet, which is as old as the Earth, melts? And what will happen if two graphic novel writers living on it run out of food? Romuald and Marie are living the story they are writing, but, like the Antarctic, Marie is gradually losing her memory.

Following "Capital and Ideology," Benjamin Adam returns to the theme of the future of our planet, which he explored in "Soon," in order to tackle the questions he is most concerned with: How should we live together (and love each other) while the Earth is being ravaged by climate change? And how and why should we create anything when everything is about to disintegrate?

Nous sommes en 2046.

Voilà des années que la hausse des températures malmène les glaces du monde entier et les données qu'elles contiennent.

C'est pour cette raison qu'il y a trente ans, douze scientifiques ont imaginé le projet Ice Memory.

Emmenés par
Jérôme Chappellaz
et Carlo Barbante,
ils avaient alors
mis au point un
ambitieux programme
de préservation.
