Mowing down lives may be a full-time job, but it's also a fantastic opportunity to meet people from all walks of life. And then, from time to time, between appointments, you can take a little break with Lao-Tseu, your pet philosophical pig. The only real problem is the customers: between the recalcitrant ones, the human laws and above all their unfair competition, the job becomes a real priesthood. But when you love it, you don't count the hours!
