Jazon is a student who lives with his father. He's a cheerful young man, with an upbeat attitude and a bright sense of humor. Jazon has plenty of friends, and would like to have girlfriends, too. In fact, he's obsessed with the idea. But he keeps coming up short — except with the girls who have “very nice personalities,” if few physical charms. For some reason, those girls adore him!

Jazon also has a depressive uncle, and an autistic cousin whose father wants to cure him through laughter therapy (with enough bad jokes to make you weep). Jazon can't even manage to find the school counselor's office — too many corridors and signs — but at least he's good at one thing: when it comes to his student job, demonstrating the soporific qualities of Tudor mattresses, there's nobody better! A sort of modern cousin of the legendary Gaston Lagaffe, Jazon is a new character you'll quickly grow to love.
