Talino had thought that the worst was behind him, that it was in his past now, alongside the memories of his native Tchad. Memories of a life that was stolen from him when he became a child soldier, and later a mercenary and a gang member. Memories of a life that was cast into shadow by his own elder brother, Anouar; the one who gave him the fire which burns in the stomach of the hyena. When he left Africa for Marseille, Talino thought that he had finally found his redemption. But Anouar is never far behind, and the embers are still glowing...
