On June 13, 2006, 18-year-old Marion Larat saw her life turned upside down. Shortly before meeting up with her boyfriend and friends, she began reading a "Bidochon" album, then went to her bathroom. It was there, at around 8 p.m., that Marion collapsed on the floor.

Her father discovered her shortly afterwards and the fire department took her to hospital. The verdict was in: massive stroke. From then on, Marion's journey became a struggle to regain her locomotion and the ability to speak.

A doctor establishes the cause as being the daily use of the pill, which can, in very rare cases, cause a stroke. So how can you rebuild your life when you have to admit you're no longer able-bodied?

A powerful account told with humor (despite everything) and humanism by Christian Binet.

In this series

Marion

le bruit des appareils médicaux m'étourdit...
la panique s'empare de moi...

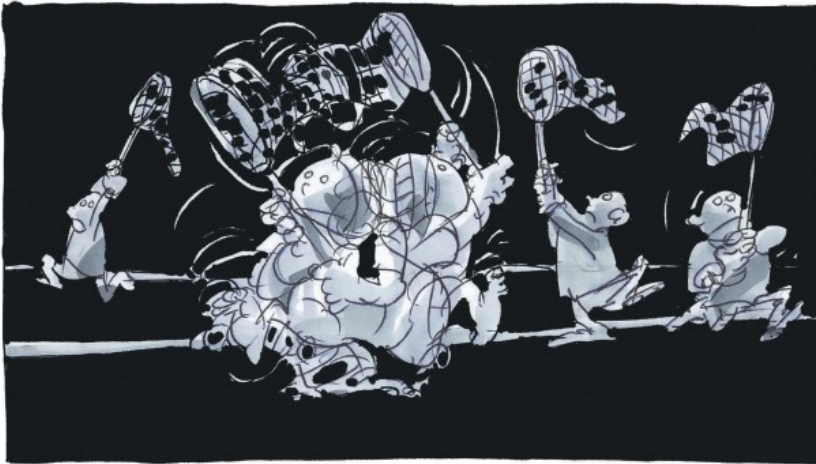

Je voudrais pleurer !

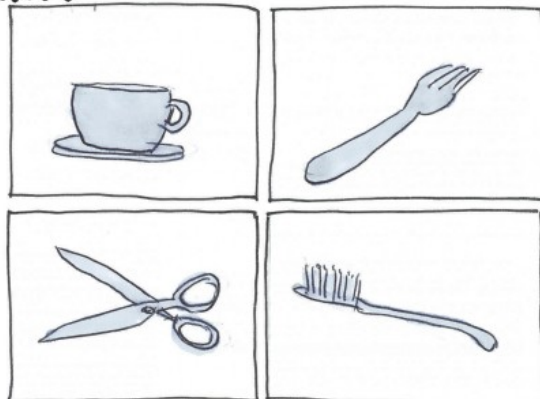

MARION N'A PLUS DE CALOTTE CRÂNIENNE. IL Y A LES CHEVEUX, LA PEAU, LA DURE-MÈRE ET TOUT DE SUITE APRÈS LE CERVEAU.
