Now in his forties, the artist Nicoby's giving himself a boost by sticking his head through the roof of his studio. In doing so, he takes stock of his life as an artist, revisiting his career through four short stories organized by season. From the springtime of creation to the winter, made darker by his mother's Alzheimer's diagnosis, the author invites his readers to share his aspirations and inspirations in a series of sequences strung together with humor and self-deprecation.
