“Silex and the City”: it’s like the Simpsons but without electricity.

An average Stone Age family tries desperately to stay ahead of their time, whether that means politics, religion, culture, lifestyle, art, or economics... From the Contemporary Prehistoric Art Biennale to the ancestors of Don Quixote, from the Doltus Sapiens to Neanderthal “visible minorities,” our entire contemporary world is dressed with unbridled satire in animal skins. The result is a caustic parody of our ever-so-highly-evolved society. See here for more information about the television adaptation of this celebrated series.
